Laurence Steinberg, Ph.D.

Laurence Steinberg, Ph.D., is the Distinguished University Professor and Laura H. Carnell Professor of Psychology at Temple University. Dr. Steinberg is former President of the Division of Developmental Psychology of the American Psychological Association and the Society for Research on Adolescence. An internationally recognized expert on psychological development during adolescence, Dr. Steinberg’s research has focused on a range of topics in the study of contemporary adolescence, including adolescent brain development, risk-taking and decision-making, parent-adolescent relationships, adolescent employment, high school reform, and juvenile justice. His work has been supported by NIH, the U.S. Departments of Justice and Education, and numerous private foundations. He was a member of the National Academies’ Board on Children, Youth, and Families, and he currently chairs the Academies’ Committee on the Science of Adolescence. Dr. Steinberg is the author of more than 350 articles and essays on growth and development during the teenage years, and the author or editor of 12 books, including Adolescence, the leading college textbook on the subject, now in its 10th edition; The 10 Basic Principles of Good Parenting, which has been published in 10 languages; and You and Your Adolescent: The Essential Guide for Ages 10 to 25. Steinberg has been the recipient of numerous awards, including the American Psychological Association’s Award for Distinguished Contributions to Research in Public Policy. In 2009, he was named the first recipient of the Klaus J. Jacobs Research Prize for Productive Youth Development. In 2013, he was inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.